No I understand this. But this is just not what I want. I want to do something like this (without using the file and command "substitution"): template.tpl No, this is just a dummy file with the name I want for the file I am writing. I am using this template.tpl file for the shell script. To explain this a bit further: The file where I want to copy the content is in the /usr/share/www-data/wwwroot folder. When I execute the shell script I want the content in /usr/share/www-data/wwwroot to be copied into the folder /var/www/html and the name of the new created file be the name of the file I execute the shell script from. And it works perfectly. And yes the new file exists. I would be glad if anyone could help me. Regards, d3er PS: The question I put on SO was deleted due to too many downvotes. A: You need to make a variable: read -r -p "Enter filename: " filename echo "Copying file \"$filename\" to \"$newfile\"" cp -f "$filename" "$newfile" The cp command will fail if you try to overwrite an existing file. A woman has been charged with failing to report the death of her adopted daughter, in a case that echoes that of Marie Colvin. Stephanie Hirsch, 35, of Santa Cruz, California, was charged on Tuesday with one felony count of failure to report a death in the first degree, according to the Santa Cruz County district attorney's office. The charge was based on Hirsch's alleged failure to report the death of her adopted daughter to police and the county's child welfare agency, the district attorney's office said. Both the child and her father died last year from a drug overdose. They were one of four adopted children Hirsch and her husband adopted from South Korea in 2012, according to the Santa Cruz Sentinel newspaper. Police discovered the couple dead in their home on February 11, the day after they were reported missing.
